美國海軍紀念日

Navy - Day

October 27 1948

Tsingtao, China

Captain's Message:

On this Navy Day, which is specially set aside to acquaint our country and our countrymen with its Naval arm of defense, we find ourselves so located, and therefore, in circumstances which do not permit making a direct contribution to that purpose. However, as a result of those very circumstances, we provide an indirect, but very real contribution to that purpose by our part in actual fulfillment of one of our Navy's missions. It is well that we all give full consideration to the thought that on this day, and future days, while assigned as at present, the demonstration of smartness, alertness, efficiency, and operational readiness is more than of vital interest to our country, but is of significance to the world at large, particularly in our geographical area of operations.

William C. Hembury,

Commander, U. S. Navy,

Commanding U. S. S. Frank Knox.

William R. Barnett,
